

Fire! Flood! Earthquake ... So much is happening, we barely look up anymore

JULY IS THE MONTH WHEN THINGS MAKE A CHANGE. JUST PAST

the solstice at the end of June, summer arrives and the planet makes a slow wind-down to the other end of its orbit around the sun. As sundown each day creeps slowly down the clock, we in the northern hemisphere look forward to cooler months! Things have gone on like this for millennia — but somehow things are just a little different.

For as long as we have kept records, there have been natural disasters on the planet; in the past couple of decades we've even had opportunity to see a few extra-terrestrial events. In the past we had the luxury of witnessing earthly catastrophes from a safe distance. But now there are more than 7 billion people sharing the air, and every time the planet sneezes, someone feels the breeze.

Fires on the planet, usually caused by lightning, have been a regular part of the landscape wherever there has been combustible material to burn. But now when a forest fire breaks out, many, many lives are affected as homes are consumed in moments. It's the same with floods and earthquakes: just part of life on our rock. What's different is how many people are affected when, say, one single field in Africa or India doesn't produce its normal yield. So many people in those vast areas live so close to starvation, that the loss of one ear of corn can be the difference between life or death for some soul — literally.

December 21, 2012

Speaking of solstices, the one at the other end of this year, December 21st, is a date the world (at least some of the world) is watching with expectancy. Most are finally agreed that this year's Christmas Season is not likely to be the end of the world, so we can tentatively breathe a sigh of relief for now. But what if it were to be the end of the world? Suppose you had access to some prophetic calendar that assured you that there would be no working for souls after a certain date, how would you handle your affairs leading up to that date? It's true that trying to sell tickets to a game is a little ineffective until closer to the event, but wouldn't you feel better if you had made some effort to at least announce the event ahead of time?
